

President's Newsletter February 2013

Dear NSAL Friends,

As I write this, the 2011 and 2012 issues of The Record are being prepared for mailing to each of our members. Producing these valuable documents is an enormous task, and we owe huge thanks to our literature maven, Carey Wall, for collecting and collating the various reports; Judy Park, our loyal photographer who captures our special NSAL memories for posterity and who worked with Twyla to select the photos for the 2011 Record; Twyla Martins, who has done yeoman service laying out the 2011 Record and working with Carla Batka Jones to layout the 2012 issue; and Doni Lystra, Jane Pearson, and Carey, all superb proofreaders who have a gift for detail, and have made sure there are as few errors as possible. These people have given untold hours of their time and professional expertise to create these two documents. Thank you, thank you.

Pittsburgh Conference: Tuesday 14 May - Sunday 19 May 2013

Pittsburgh
Wood block print by Jim Rugg

The National Conference will be in Pittsburgh from Tuesday May 14 (if you're on the Executive Committee or National Board, Wednesday evening for others), through Saturday, May 18th. But plan to stay an extra day because on Sunday our hosts have organized a fabulous post conference day trip to Frank Lloyd Wright's Fallingwater and Kentuck Knob with a final stop at the Touchstone Center for Crafts. It will be a rich, fascinating, fun, full day. To learn more about each stop on the tour, here are links:

Workshops:

In addition to the National Printmaking Competition and the many special Pittsburgh venues for dinners and conference activities that the Pittsburgh Chapter has planned for us, this year National is offering a series of valuable workshops at the Conference for NSAL members. There will be a fundraising and grantwriting session where attendees will come away with basic skills for succeeding in those ever-so-necessary endeavors for chapter survival.

We also will be offering each chapter an NSAL website template, created in WordPress. At the Web Lab Workshop, an instructor will walk you through the process of customizing the template for each chapter’s individual needs. Each person will come away with the beginnings of a custom website for their chapter and the skillsets to complete the job at home. For chapters that do not have a website, and those who would like to update their website look to be consistent with National, this is an unprecedented opportunity. Chapter Presidents, be sure you send at least one representative from your chapter to learn this invaluable skill.

Finally, we will offer a session on using DropBox, a modern way of sharing documents and information between chapters. Anyone is welcome to attend these workshops.

Make it a Road Trip

Pittsburgh is a day’s drive away or less for 12 of NSAL’s chapters. Plan a road trip with your chapter friends, fill a car, and drive to this beautiful city located on three rivers.

News of Our Winners:

Megan Hilty's debut solo album

Megan Hilty, First Place 2004 Musical Theater

Megan's debut album, It Happens All The Time, will be available March 12, 2013. The album is produced by Grammy-winners Andy Zulla and Jimmy Hogarth and showcases a different side of Megan.

The key to her debut album was finding songs that she could identify with. "Stylistically these aren't the type of songs that I'm used to singing. It was exciting and challenging, for example, to take a song written by Ne-Yo and make it my own," says Megan.

"I was looking for lyrics I could connect with," she explains, "which comes from another part of my theatrical background: I always feel that there has to be a point to what I'm singing, instead of it just being a pretty sound. The lyrics reflect the year I've had in breaking up and finding new love, whereas the music shows my eclectic tastes. While it wasn't intentional, the album took on a break-up theme, "not a sad one so much as the end of a chapter and wondering what comes next," she says.

When taken together, the songs on It Happens All The Time instill great pride in Megan as "the first recording that's just me. It's really thrilling to hear and I can't wait to share it with my fans."

At 23, a seasoned opera veteran returns home

BY PHILLIP VALYS
Staff writer

Nadine Sierra spent most of her strict childhood watching, almost to an obsessive degree, a grainy VHS tape featuring Puccini's "La Bohème" at the Metropolitan Opera.

Then 10 years old, she'd divide her time between vocal lessons ordered by her mother and over the performance footage, scrutinizing every rich harmony, example of dramatic flair and theatrical sensibility within the work.

"My mom rented the videotape from the library, and I don't think she ever returned it," says Sierra with a laugh, speaking by phone last week. "I watched it every day and cried every single time. My late grandmother on my mom's side used to sing professionally and knew what a special voice sounded like, and she encouraged me to practice it. They wanted me to excel, and so did I."

That was how the former Delray Beach resident discovered her own soprano. A decade later, she became the youngest person ever to win the Metropolitan Opera's prestigious National Council Auditions.

Now, she's returning home to South Florida to don the female lead Gilda in Giuseppe Verdi's "Rigoletto," a production from Florida Grand Opera that recently hosted a of shows at Miami's Adrienne Arsht Center before heading to the Broward Center for the Performing Arts tonight and Saturday.

At 23, Sierra is a seasoned opera veteran. By 14, the soprano was cutting her teeth at Alexander Dreyfoos School of the Arts.

A year later, the buzz-generating virtuoso crowned Puccini's "O Mio Babbino Caro" live on NPR's "From the Top."

By 16, she was belting Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel" for Palm Beach Opera's Young Artists Program before relocating to New York to study opera at Mannes College of Music.

"They offer me a full scholarship to Juilliard, but I didn't want to go to a big school. No, no, no," Sierra says. "The training, not the school, mattered to me more. To continue growing with healthy vocals, you a teacher who nurture your voice for many years, and I felt like I could get that serious education at Mannes."

It was this same reasoning — valuing vocal work over the spotlight — that Sierra declined an offer to join the Met Opera's Lindemann Young Artist Development Program for a smaller, but no less prestigious school.

Sierra's currently a second-year Adler Fellow in the San Francisco Opera's young-artists program, sharpening her radiant high notes with polish and accuracy but steeling herself to the country's most-prestigious opera houses.

Florida Grand Opera is one of them. For "Rigoletto," which is directed by FGO's Jeffrey Marc Buchman, Sierra trained two months for each act in the three-act libretto. The story follows a court jester who infamously mocks the husbands of the young women the kingdom's duke has seduced, until the jester's daughter herself becomes one of the duke's victims.

Sierra says she often does vocal exercises and bikram yoga immediately before a show, which helps during more challenging arias, such as the "Caro Nome" cadenza that she performs lying on her back.

"It's not that hard anymore. It's not because I'm superhuman — it's because a lot of teachers wanted me to lay on my back and sing, releasing all the tension in your back and neck that you build up," she says.

Nadine Sierra, above, is back in South Florida, appearing as Gilda, below, in "Rigoletto."

DECEMBER 2012/JANUARY 2013 NEWSLETTER

I hope everyone is having a Happy New Years. Here are some quick updates. I am doing "Arts After School" again. It is an afterschool program where I work with younger kids in elementary school grades kindergarten through fifth. This is my second year participating. My lesson involves drawing cartoons with them. Its been really rewarding for the children and I. They Love it!

Below I have two big paintings I finished for clients. They each were really fun to work on. One in particular was done for the Bishop at my church, and it was such an honor to paint it. I usually don't work in landscapes, so that one definitely stretched my spirit and my abilities for the better. The other piece was a painting I did of picture over 30 years old. They gave it to me, and told me they wanted to capture an intimate moment in time. I really enjoyed the composition in both pieces. God is good.

This month I also have work featured in the "small works show" at Glave Kocen Gallery, 1620 West Main St. Richmond VA, 23220. This is my second year participating and I'm very excited. I've attached one my newest drawings for my next exhibit in 2014! This drawing is of an african sculpture. It will be on display at Glave Kocen until the end of January. I've also attached two sketches I drew for two other families.

Lastly I want to thank you for supporting me last year and keeping my family and I in your prayers. Even though my father passed away It was an excellent year for me and I thank God for it! I have been very blessed! I pray this year all your plans for 2013 manifest into reality, and I hope you share about your blessings as they come. Thank you.

Warmest Regards,
